

Four Fair Females from Indiana: A Travel Journal of 1938

In the summer of 1938, four young women from Indiana embarked on a cross-country road trip that would take them through 12 states and over 5,000 miles. The women, all in their early 20s, were recent college graduates and eager to explore the country and experience life beyond their small town.

The women kept a detailed journal of their travels, which provides a fascinating glimpse into their adventures and the America they encountered along the way. The journal is filled with vivid descriptions of the places they visited, the people they met, and the challenges they faced. It is also a testament to the strength and resilience of the human spirit, as the women persevered through difficult times with humor and good grace.

The four women who made up the travel party were:

- Mary: The oldest of the group, Mary was a teacher and a talented artist. She was responsible for keeping the journal and capturing the group's adventures in words and sketches.
- Betty: A vivacious and outgoing young woman, Betty was always up for a new adventure. She was the group's unofficial leader and kept everyone's spirits high, even during the toughest times.
- Ruth: A shy and introspective young woman, Ruth was a gifted writer and poet. She often retreated to her journal to record her thoughts and observations about the world around her.
- Jean: The youngest of the group, Jean was a bright and curious young woman. She was always eager to learn new things and experience new cultures.

The women's journey began in Indianapolis, Indiana, on June 25, 1938. They traveled in a 1937 Ford coupe, which they affectionately named "Lizzie." They drove west through Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, California, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho before returning home to Indiana on September 10, 1938.

Along the way, the women visited national parks, museums, historical sites, and small towns. They met a variety of people, including farmers, ranchers, Native Americans, and fellow travelers. They also experienced a variety of challenges, including car trouble, bad weather, and financial difficulties.

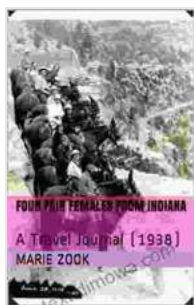

The women's travel journal is a rich and detailed record of their experiences. Mary's vivid descriptions of the places they visited bring the journey to life, while Betty's lively anecdotes provide a humorous and often poignant look at the group's adventures. Ruth's introspective writings offer a deeper understanding of the women's thoughts and feelings about the world around them.

The journal is also a valuable historical document, providing a glimpse into the Great Depression era and the resilience of the human spirit. The women faced many challenges during their journey, but they never gave up on their dreams. They persevered through difficult times with humor and good grace, and their story is an inspiration to us all.

The travel journal of the Four Fair Females from Indiana is a charming and inspiring story of friendship, adventure, and resilience. It is a valuable historical document that provides a unique perspective on the Great Depression era and the American spirit. The journal is a must-read for anyone interested in women's history, travel, or the history of the United States.
